An aerial view shows the darker water of the Great Salt Lake pouring into the AMAX evaporation pond through a breach in the dike.

Flooding of the ponds, which AMAX uses to extract magnesium and minerals from the briny lake water, did not halt operations at the plant, he said.
 Nielsen said AMAX has not re quested state assistance. However, he said he had been authorized by Bangerter to call in Utah National Guard engineering units if neces sary.

 Bangerter flew over the flooded area with Nielsen on Sunday, then left on a previously scheduled trip to New York to meet with officials of Standard and Poor, a bond rating service, about a proposed bond issue to raise money to pump excess water from the lake into the desert to the west.

 The Legislature last month ap proved a $72 million plan to pump the lake and reinforce dikes pro tecting I-15 and sewage treatment plants on the east shore of the 80 mile-long, 30-mile-wide lake. The governor is seeking to issue $40 million in bonds to help pay for the plan.

 The lake, swollen by heavy pre cipitation, has risen about 10 feet during the past four years, causing more than $175 million in property damage. Last month it reached its highest recorded level at 4,211.6 feet above sea level.

Officials watch Wyoming dam

GREEN RIVER, Wyo. (AP) — Bureau of Reclamation officials are confident the structurally weak Fontenelle Dam will hold despite record spring runoff flows that are swelling the reservoir behind the earthen dam.

"It's looking good and we don't see anything there that concerns us with it continuing to fill," said BuRec Land and Water Operations chief Wayne Cook. "We don't be lieve it's going to fail."

Runoff has been pouring into the reservoir at a rate of more than 19,000 cubic feet per second since Saturday.

Minnie still cooking at 80

Herald Photo/Lane Critser

Minnie Spanton rolls out a pie crust that will be enjoyed by her customers.

four daughters, Holly, Connie, Betty, and Billie Jo. "We all went to work to support ourselves," said Betty. Minnie said she worked, "Because I was too proud to go on welfare. I pulled my daughters in to work. They would stand on crates to help me."

Minnie gleaned from her mother and grandmother's knowledge. "In those days, we didn't watch to learn, we worked to learn."

Her wages were $1.25 a day, for 8-10 hours work. "Those were good wages, but we could live on $8 per week," she said. "Now, I'm my own boss and come and go as I please — and I work for nothing!"

Her reputation is widespread, and she is known for her scones, gravies, cream and fruit pies, and her sauces — all from secret recipes. She has made 18-20 pies per day, "and used a case of eggs in the process."

She was prohibited from competing in fairs because she was "considered professional and would win everything."
